Remain calm and survive!

In an emergency evacuation, everybody's safety is the prime concern. This guide provides an emergency plan framework including how to highlight escape routes, sound the alarm, start the evacuation and complete employee assembly. Then it goes much further discussing what actions to take for any critical plant operations that should not be left unattended.

Pandemics – Including Influenza

Don't Put it Off, Get Vaccinated! H1N1 flu virus is causing panic in some areas, no worry in others. For the public it is a debate. For businesses time lost to debate is not an acceptable risk. What is known is that the H1N1 swine flu is affecting younger and healthier people; it's contagious and spreads when germs enter the nose, eyes, or throat. Want to gamble? Bet on a horse race.

Watch out for people who don't hear the alarm.

Accounting for everybody's safety after an evacuation is a major responsibility. Sometimes employees work in unfamiliar noisy surroundings or are using personal protective equipment that could prevent them from hearing an alarm. Teach employees how to operate 'buddy systems' with workers watching out for each other. Visitors may also be present; look out for them too.
