Make your plant the best...Take personal responsibility for safety.

Working at the same job for many years tends to make people overconfident. This suggests experienced employees, plus inexperienced workers, may lead to higher injury statistics. This Outline offers a chance to limit those statistics by ensuring employees, who understand workplace safety hazards, also assume personal responsibilities for fellow workers. Every day is a different challenge.

- Safety rules are for everyone's protection
- Check regularly for new safety rules and changing workplace hazards

Remember the domino effect... remove the cause, and there won't be any effect.

"For the want of a nail the shoe was lost..." is a clever 18th century ditty encouraging children to apply logical progression to the consequences of their actions. In today's world it's 'The Domino Effect' and workers must always remember that small slip-ups can have far reaching results. "Safety first... will produce safety dividends."

Safety responsibility depends on everyone.

Exactly what are these employees' rights everyone talks about? They are 'rights' that must be included in the company's safety procedures. Now, even though the team understands these rights are they also aware of the specific responsibilities that come with them? Has your team 'signed off' on them? If you're not sure, check the rights here!
